Teach how to wear Kente.....it's an art a skill one has to learn

Nana Kwaku Bonsam is a Ghanaian Traditional Priest, Folk Medicine Doctor and a traditional ruler (chief) at his village of Akomadan-Afrancho Bonsamkrom in the Ashanti region of Ghana. The Ashanti ethnic group are part of the major Akan speaking people of Ghana who have a rich cultural heritage. The world's famous Kente and Adinkra clothes originates from this community. The Ashantis have a rich history of being super rich maintaining a large empire before Ghana's independence from the colonial overlords of Great Britain, and having an extensive traditional government that is still practiced under their King Nana Osei Tutu. The Ashantis are also

Nana Kwaku Bonsam is the most popular Folk Medicine doctor and Traditional priest in Ghana. He is known for his benevolence, involvement in non-profit projects and his services to the community that are aimed at improving the lives of individuals as well as the community towards poverty alleviation. Nana maintains traditional health centers in about 5 communities where he uses folk music and dance therapy, traditional medicine and ancient rituals as well as counseling to help people address physical and spiritual health challenges in their lives. He is visiting the United States for the first time after numerous visits to many European countries and according to him, he is in America to help the African Diaspora and to learn about new ideas on how to use the traditions to meet the needs of the people. He was particularly excited to hear about how the Brooklyn Arts Council and its Folk Artists were using Folk Arts to respond to Hurricane Sandy. You can read or view more of Nana's works and services in Ghana and abroad by googling his name: Nana Kwaku Bonsam. (PREKESE GHANA MEDIA-USA)
